Conservative Youth Group To Stay Open

Young Americans for Freedom, which announced several weeks ago that it might have to stop its activities for lack of funds, said yesterday that its doors would remain open and that its activities would continue. YAF is the nation's largest conservative youth organization with 57,100 members in 710 chapters.

Randal Teague, YAF's executive director, said, "We have made the policy and administrative decisions to continue ahead. We are still in debt and the need for funds is immense, but the need for YAF is too great to let it falter. We will continue through the spring, and we will make decisions in May, based upon our financial support from adults at that point, as to what extent organizationally we can exist thereafter."
